

Sociology 414
Feminist Theorizing:
Critical Reconstructions of Sociology
Fall 2017
Dawn Currie

Seminars: Tuesdays 4PM – 7PM
Seminar Location: Classroom: AnSo 134

Office: Room 3129 AnSo
Office Hours: Tuesday 1-3PM, or by Appointment
Contact Info: Email Messages: dawn.currie@ubc.ca
(assignments will not be accepted by email)

Course Description

Conventional sociological theory provides formulistic explanations about the ‘causes’ of social phenomena. In contrast, this seminar emphasizes theorizing as an ongoing process of accounting for the social world and how we apprehend it. Such an approach abandons the search for objective ‘Truth’ in favour of exploring the implications of ‘embodied’ knowledge that locates knowledge seeking in its socio-political context. In short, theorizing participates in Dorothy Smith’s ‘conceptual practice of ruling’. The result is that feminist theorizing recognizes and accounts for itself as a political project characterized by lively debate not only with the ‘masters’ of social theory but also within feminist ranks (academic and otherwise). My goal is to help you see how debate continues to be productive for feminism, and to equip you with conceptual tools to engage in ongoing theoretical debate over the nature of specifically feminist sociology and its contributions to not only sociology, but also global movements for social justice.

Sociology 414 is not a lecture-based course; as a seminar it is organized around the principle of the co-construction of knowledge. The instructor’s role is to facilitate collaborative learning. Although including instructor commentary and ‘mini-lectures’, this course has a participatory format requiring student engagement. It thus requires students to keep up with the assigned readings; students who are not willing to take responsibility for their learning in a collaborative setting are advised to seek a different course.

Sociology 414 counts as 3 credits of theory required for a Sociology Major / Minor.

Required Readings

Required readings have been assigned for each session, typically two readings a week. As a course in feminist theorizing, the readings may ‘challenge’ your understanding of sociology. I will not lecture on the content of readings; you will have the opportunity to discuss and debate the readings with classmates. Following small group discussions, I will give short presentations on key analytical ideas that frame the readings.

All readings (except for Homework One) are available to be downloaded from Connect at no cost to students. Readings come from feminist anthologies and books, as well as sociology journals (Gender & Society is an official journal of the ASA) and the feminist journal, Signs: Journal of Women in Culture and Society.

Also Recommended:

I have included 'Recommended Readings' that amplify my presentations. While these readings are not required, if you miss class they provide a way for you to explore what we covered. Students with a specialized interest in feminist theory may find them useful for their work in other courses.

Pedagogy

Over the years of various mission statements, UBC has promised 'to provide a learning environment that will inspire and enable individuals to grow intellectually, recognize their social responsibilities, [and] be prepared to live and work in a global environment.' This promise emphasizes student-centered, curiosity-based learning that will develop the capacity for critical thinking and equip students to work collaboratively. In keeping with these goals, Sociology 414 employs an antiracist feminist pedagogy designed to enhance the following skills:

- to think critically; that is, to recognize how power works through/as knowledge and to think about the implications of this recognition;
- to assess scholarship that addresses social issues that can be emotionally and ideologically laden;
- to work collaboratively with others from various life experiences, ethnic backgrounds, and levels of academic preparation;
- to connect academic knowledge to life beyond the university, particularly to movements for social justice; this skill requires the ability to connect theoretical knowledge and social change.

In order to achieve these learning goals, this course will combine seminar-style class discussion, small group work, instructor commentary, and independent assignments.

Responsibilities and Course Policies

It is the responsibility of the instructor to help students develop the above skills as the basis for life-long learning. She will help students maximize their intellectual development by maintaining high standards of academic performance.

Following UBC regulations, regular attendance is expected of students. Students who neglect their academic work and who miss assignments may be excluded from final examinations. Students who are unavoidably absent because of illness or disability should report to their instructor on return to classes. It is the responsibility of students to complete assigned work (including weekly readings) according to the course schedule, and to conduct themselves in a manner that is respectful of others and conducive to learning as a process that requires continual interrogation, of both received knowledge and our own understandings. This course is designed on the principle of students as active learners rather than recipients of knowledge; students will play an active role in maintaining a suitable learning environment for this course. Please note that hard copies should be submitted for all assignments.

The University accommodates students with disabilities who have registered with the Disability Resource Centre. The University accommodates students whose religious obligations conflict with attendance, submitting assignments, or completing scheduled assignments. Please let the instructor know in advance, preferably during the first two weeks of class, if you will require any accommodation on these grounds. Absence for varsity athletics, family obligations, or other similar commitments will not be accommodated as a matter of course; students should discuss these commitments with the instructor before the date that allows students to drop courses without penalty. Students missing classes are not entitled to personal ‘tutorials’ during office hours to catch up on missed lectures.

When exceptional circumstances will prevent you from completing an assignment on time, you may request an extension; where possible and appropriate an extension will be permitted. In the absence of an approved extension, a 1% reduction of grade will be assigned for each day for late assignments (excluding weekends when the AnSo building is closed).

Plagiarism is a serious offense; in this course it can result in a failing grade.

Course Format

The instructor will elaborate key issues / concepts addressed in assigned readings and introduce theoretical approaches employed by feminist sociologists in the study of gender/gender relations. These ‘tools’ for theorizing will be discussed within their social and political context, so that feminist theorizing will be characterized as a reflexive endeavor, continually changing in the face of feminist politics as a globalizing movement for social justice. The pace and depth of material covered will be determined, in part, by students’ learning needs.

Instructor-led materials are meant as a supplement to seminar presentations and class discussion. Students will be organized into small groups for class exercises and to co-facilitate discussion of assigned readings. Seminar presentations are not a substitute for independent reading but rather offer the opportunity for you to deepen your understanding of the assigned texts. The purpose of seminar discussion is to engage classmates in ‘interrogation’ of the readings. Interrogation takes reading beyond a summary of content by asking what the article accomplishes, how, what is potentially problematic or missing, and so on.

Seminar Schedule

The following schedule has been drafted for this class. Learning for this class will not follow a set 'recipe' however; adjustments to this schedule may be necessary to meet the needs of learners. It is your responsibility to keep yourself updated on any changes, which will be well publicized during class meetings. You are expected to read the assigned material before the seminar, bringing notes to class (hard copy or electronic) that will enable you to participate in the small group activities that have been designed for each session. Recommended readings are not required but accompany my presentations; they are provided for participants who wish to 'deepen' their reading on specific topics. I will post the seminar Power Points on Connect following each session.

September 12th – Getting Started

Who am I? Who are you? What will we do in Sociology 414? After introductions to seminar participants and to the course expectations and requirements, we will explore the role of theory in sociology. To get us started, key concepts will be defined through a class activity. You will also be given your first 'homework' assignment.

September 19th – What do We Mean, Feminist Sociology?

Given that this course assumes a distinctly feminist sociology, we need to clarify exactly what this term implies. Based on your homework, we will explore three questions: What is feminism? What makes sociology identifiably 'feminist'? How? Draw on your homework but also your training in sociology and non-academic experience. I will review and compare the most common ways that 'gender' – as a key organizing principle of feminist work -- has been incorporated into sociology. During an in-class activity you will have an opportunity to identify 'where you stand'.

Assigned Readings:

Thwaites, Rachel. 2017. 'Making a choice or taking a stand? Choice feminism, political engagement and the contemporary feminist movement' Feminist Theory 18(1): 55-68

Braun, Virginia. 2009. 'The women are doing it for themselves' Australian Feminist Studies 24(60): 233-49

Recommended Reading:

Baumgardner, Jennifer and Amy Richards. 2004. 'Feminism and Femininity: Or How We Learned to Stop Worrying and Love the Thong' pp. 59-67 in M. Fine (ed) All About the Girl: Culture, Power, and Identity. New York: Routledge

September 26th -- 'Gender' as a Sociological 'Problematic'

In this session we will explore the intellectual context that gave rise to 'feminist' sociology. We will see why feminists found it necessary to refute the biological essentialism replete in conventional scholarship on the roles of women and men in society. We will explore how the Second Wave emphasis on 'gender' as the lynchpin of women's oppression led to the erasure of 'the body.' In the remainder of the seminar we will see how the 'gender essentialism' promoted by Second Wave feminism became a central problem, theoretically and politically, for especially Third Wave feminists. The goal of this session is to understand how knowledge seeking reflects the intellectual context of inquiry, encouraging us to think about knowledge – especially sociological knowledge -- as a venue for the operation of power.

Assigned Readings:

Sydie, Rosalind. 2004. 'Sex and the sociological fathers' Pp. 36-53 in B. L. Marshall and A. Witz (eds) Engendering the Social: Feminist Encounters with Sociological Theory. Maidenhead, Berkshire: Open University Press

Jackson, Margaret. 1987. "'Facts of Life" or the erotization of women's oppression? Sexology and the social construction of heterosexuality' Pp. 52-81 in P. Caplan (ed) The Cultural Construction of Sexuality. London: Tavistock

Recommended Reading:

Smith, Dorothy E. 1987. 'A peculiar eclipsing: Women's exclusion from man's culture' Pp. 17-43 in D. E. Smith The Everyday World as Problematic: A feminist sociology. Toronto: University of Toronto Press

Mann, Susan Archer and Douglas J. Huffman. 2005. 'The Decentering of Second Wave Feminism and the Rise of the Third Wave' Science & Society 69(1): 56-91

Feminist Challenges: 'The Woman Question' in Sociology

This course emphasizes the contested nature of knowledge, including feminist knowledge. In this section we will explore key positions and debates advanced through feminist theorizing in order to explore what is distinctive about feminist sociology and what feminist knowledge seeking contributes to our discipline. Thematic focus is given to what operates through, but remains unquestioned, in much sociological theory: power as a gendered process.

October 3rd -- Feminist Foundations: To Be or Not To Be 'women'

By now the complexity of feminist theorizing should be abundantly clear; there is a wide range of theoretical frameworks that attempt to account for gendered inequalities as the central 'problematic' for feminist sociology. In this session we will explore how postmodern feminists challenge the 'gender essentialism' encouraged by Second Wave 'women's liberation' and the binary thinking implicit in much modernist gender theory. What does it mean to reject the foundational categories of feminist theory such as 'gender' or, as Butler argues, even the category 'woman' itself? Does this rejection lead to the demise of distinctly feminist theory? What about a distinctly feminist politics? While the remainder of the course addresses these kinds of questions, in this session we will explore the philosophical grounds for feminist debate.

Assigned Readings:

Butler, Judith. 1992. 'Contingent Foundations: Feminism and the Question of "Postmodernism"' Pp. 35-57 in J. Butler and J. Scott (eds.) Feminists Theorize the Political. New York: Routledge

Fraser, Nancy and Linda J. Nicholson. 1990. 'Social criticism without philosophy: An encounter between feminism and postmodernism' Pp. 19-38 in L. J. Nicholson (ed) Feminism / Postmodernism. New York: Routledge

October 10th -- Women's Bodies as a Conduit for the Operation of Power

Historically, sociology has made a clear distinction between 'nature' and 'the social', claiming the latter as sociological terrain (while ignoring the former). Although this distinction erased the body from sociology, as we have seen this distinction is gendered. We will explore feminist 'bio-politics' that emerged as a challenge to feminist 'gender essentialism' and the erasure of the body in sociology. Theoretically, Third Wave feminists draw attention to the body as a site for the operation of power. How does power operate to produce sexed as well as gendered bodies identifiable as female 'women' and male 'men'? What does feminist debate over 'transsexuality' reveal about feminist ambivalence toward the body?

Assigned Readings:

Shuster, Stef M. 2017. 'Punctuating Accountability: How discursive aggression regulates transgender people' Gender and Society 31(4): 481-502

Lovelock, Michael. 2016. 'Call me Caitlin: making and making over the 'authentic' transgender body in Anglo-American popular culture' Journal of Gender Studies DOI: 10.1080/09589236.2016.1155978

Recommended Reading:

West, Candice and Don H. Zimmerman. 1987. 'Doing Gender' Gender and Society 1(2): 125-151

Bartky, Sandra Lee. 1988. 'Foucault, Femininity, and the Modernization of Patriarchal Power' Pp. 61-86 in Irene Diamond and Lee Quinby (eds) Feminism and Foucault: Reflections on Resistance. Boston: Northeastern University Press

NOTE: Your Annotated Glossary is due today. Bring a hard copy to class.

October 17th -- Standpoint: Women's Experience as a Source of Knowledge

By now it should be clear why 'experience' is given primacy in feminist sociology, and how feminism politicizes experience by claiming 'the personal is political'. Based on the assumption that women's experiences offer a starting point for a 'fuller' understanding of the social world than 'disembodied' sociological theory, standpoint has become a hallmark of feminist sociology. At the same time as being widely adopted, however, it remains a highly contested approach to knowledge seeking. In this session we will explore the origins and central premises of standpoint, variously presented by commentators as a theory, an epistemology, and a way of doing sociology.

Assigned Readings:

Smith, Dorothy E. 2005. 'Women's Standpoint: Embodied Knowing versus the Ruling Relations' Pp. 7-26 in D. E. Smith Institutional Ethnography: A Sociology for People. London and Toronto: AltaMira Press

hooks, bell. 1984. 'Black Women: Shaping Feminist Theory' Pp. 1-15 in bell hooks Feminist Theory: From Margin to Center. Boston: South End Press

Recommended Reading:

Hartsock, Nancy. 1983. 'The Feminist Standpoint: Toward a Specifically Feminist Historical Materialism' Pp. 231-251 in Nancy Hartsock Money, Sex and Power: Toward a Feminist Historical Materialism. New York: Longman

October 24th -- Sociology for Women: Challenging Sociology about Women

Debates explored in this seminar testify to the contradictory nature of knowledge seeking as sociologists. Complications arise because we are, unavoidably, part of what we are trying to understand. While conventional sociologists advance the claim that we can separate ourselves from the social world in order to study it as 'scientists', feminists challenge this claim. Where does this position leave us in terms of advancing a feminist sociology that avoids the kinds of problems we have identified so far? Can feminists make 'truth' claims? How? One answer is Dorothy Smith's institutional ethnography as sociology for people rather than about people. While Smith's sociology is often equated with 'standpoint', we will emphasize how her 'sociology for people' challenges not only established sociology, but also much feminist theorizing.

Assigned Readings:

Smith, Dorothy E. 2005. 'Knowing the Social: An Alternative Design' Pp. 27-45 in Dorothy E. Smith Institutional Ethnography: A Sociology for People. Toronto: Altamira Press

Smith, Dorothy E. 1990. 'Femininity as discourse' Pp. 159-208 in D. E. Smith Texts, Facts, and Femininity: Exploring the Relations of Ruling. London and New York: Routledge

October 31st -- Challenging the Primacy of Whiteness: Intersectionality

Similar to standpoint, intersectional theorizing has had a significant impact for sociological thinking. In fact, commentators refer to 'intersectionality studies' as a distinct field. Originating in the writing of Black womanist writers in the USA, intersectionality was embraced as a remedy to the racism of much dominant feminist work, as well as the kinds of criticisms raised by postmodernists about the inability of the category 'women' – despite its recognition of the plurality of womanhood – to account for diversity among women. In this session we will explore the tenets of intersectional thinking and identify ongoing debate over both its interpretation and its utility. Does intersectionality remedy the problems that gave rise to postmodern 'gender skepticism'?

Assigned Readings:

Collins, Patricia Hill. 1986. 'Learning from the Outsider Within: The sociological significance of Black feminist thought' Social Problems 33(6): 514-532

Choo, Hae Yeon and Myra Marx Ferree. 2010. 'Practicing Intersectionality in Sociological Research: A Critical Analysis of Inclusions, Interactions, and Institutions in the Study of Inequalities' Sociological Theory 28(2): 129-149

November 7th -- Queering Feminist Theory

Despite the emergence of lesbian feminist during the 1970s, heterosexuality remains the unacknowledged 'master' category of much sociological work on gender, including feminist work. This tendency is encouraged when sociology departments offer courses in 'sociology of gender' as distinct from 'sociology of sexuality'. In this session we will explore 'queer theory' as a challenge to processes of categorization that contribute to the normalization of heterosexuality. Can political activists work without categories to signify social identities? What might it mean to 'queer' sociology? Is it possible to theorize the social world without contributing to 'normalization'?

Assigned Readings:

Ingraham, Chris. 1994. 'The Heterosexual Imaginary: Feminist Sociology and Theories of Gender' Sociological Theory 12(2): 203-219

Namaste, Viviane. 2009. 'Undoing Theory: The "Transgender Question" and the Epistemic Violence of Anglo-American Feminist Thought' Hypatia 24(3): 11-32

November 14th -- Challenging Western Ethnocentrism

Second Wave feminism, particularly in the USA, championed itself as the 'leader' of a global movement for 'women's liberation'. This positioning was made possible through a history of western domination on the world stage. Second Wave western feminists advanced the notion of 'international feminism' through the notion of 'sisterhood' among women (with western feminists assuming the role of 'big sister'). In this session we will explore how non-western women have challenged the hegemony of western, anglo-feminism and ask what a global movement of women within current processes of neo-liberal globalization looks like. What does western feminism look like from the 'outside'? What are the implications for feminist sociologists, many of who desire take up careers as 'Third World development experts'?

Assigned Readings:

Mohanty, Chandra Talpade. 2003. "'Under Western Eyes" Revisited: Feminist Solidarity through Anticapitalist Struggles' Signs: Journal of Women in Culture and Society 28(2): 499-535

Narayan, Uma. 1989. 'The project of feminist epistemology: Perspectives from a nonwestern feminist' Pp. 256-272 in A. M. Jaggar and S. R. Bordo (eds) Gender / Body / Knowledge: Feminist reconstructions of being and knowing. New Brunswick: Rutgers University Press

Recommended Reading:

Mohanty, Chandra Talpade. 1984. 'Under Western Eyes: Feminist Scholarship and Colonial Discourses' Boundary 2 12(3) – 13(1): 333-358

NOTE: Your QRIs are due today. Bring a hard copy to class.

November 21st -- What about men? Critical Studies in Masculinity

Feminist theorists have transformed sociology by asking 'what about women?' In the context of 'women's studies' as a vibrant and rapidly expanding field, scholars began to ask what 'gender studies' means for the study of men and masculinity. Answers include the emergence of 'Men's Studies' (a product of primarily US-based work) and 'Critical Masculinity Studies' (a product of primarily Australian and European scholars). In this session we will explore the relationship of these new fields to feminist studies in order to critically assess the implications of putting 'masculinity' (and men) back into the sociological agenda. This assessment will also enable us to revisit the notion of 'standpoint' and critically reconsider how power works through knowledge seeking.

Assigned Readings:

Hearn, Jeff. 1998. 'Theorizing men and men's theorizing: Varieties of discursive practices in men's theorizing of men' Theory and Society 27: 781-816

Connell, R. W. and James W. Messerschmidt. 2005. 'Hegemonic Masculinity: Rethinking the concept' Gender & Society 19(6): 829-859

November 28th -- The Challenges of Feminist Sociology

In the closing session we will revisit how power is implicated in knowledge seeking, including knowledge seeking by feminists. Who benefits from feminist knowledge? What are the challenges of institutionalizing feminist knowledge within the academy? Are there any benefits? What happens when the notion of scientific 'truth' comes under suspicion? Has feminist sociology avoided operating as ideological practice? If so, how? If not, why not? Answers to these kinds of questions will be open to class debate.

Recommended Reading:

Smith, Dorothy E. 1996. 'Telling the Truth after Postmodernism' Symbolic Interaction 19(3): 171-202

Connell, Raewyn. 2012. 'Transsexual women and feminist thought: Toward new understanding and new politics' Signs: Journal of Women in Culture and Society 37(4): 857-881

Required Work and Assessment of Students

Participation (home work notes):	10%
Annotated Glossary (ten terms):	20%
QRIs (two):	20%
Final Examination:	50%

Students will be graded on independent work, although much of the learning for this course will be collaborative. Four required assignments enable students to be assessed on work carried out throughout the Term as well as at the end of the course. These assignments will be discussed in more detail in class.

Participation: I will not keep attendance. In order to make your grade for 'participation' meaningful, you will receive a grade for participation in class activities and for homework. The purpose of homework is to ensure that students are prepared for small group discussion. I will accept homework only on the day it is taken up in class; you will receive points for evidence of engagement as well as simply completion of homework. I will use homework papers to assess learning as the course unfolds, but I will not return individual comments. Participation counts for 10% of your final grade. I will accept only hard copies of Homework.

Annotated Glossary: You should keep a reading journal for this course. Your first assignment is an annotated glossary of TEN key concepts in the assigned readings. Your glossary should: identify the concept; define the concept in your own words, in order to demonstrate comprehension; discuss the contributions that this concept makes to feminist theorizing; and conclude with your assessment (of controversies surrounding the concept, limitations, political impact, and so on – whatever you feel is significant in the context of our seminar). Each annotation should be about one single-spaced page. Your grade will be based on demonstration of both comprehension of the concept and your ability to employ it to express your own ideas (See below). This assignment is due October 10th. It is worth 20% of your final grade.

QRI's: Required readings will be the subject of class discussion during seminar meetings. In preparation for weekly discussions and activities, you should keep a reading journal that does more than simply record the 'content' of reading but interrogates the author's claims. We will discuss 'interrogation' during our first session and I will provide examples of the kinds of questions you might use. This assignment builds on this way of reading in the form of QRIs (my term). Choose a Quote from one of the assigned readings that interests you and that contains ideas that you find relevant to your learning. Write a Response that captures key ideas being presented by the author and discusses what you find provocative, interesting, or relevant. This is where you interrogate the text. Connect this discussion to feminist theorizing in sociology (Implications). What contributions does the article make to ongoing debates in sociology? What might you question or challenge? Why? And so on. This is where you assess the text.

Hand in two QRIs on November 14th. Each QRI should be about 5 double-spaced pages. Criteria for my assessment include: relevance of your chosen quote, demonstration that you read the article in full, engagement with the quote in the context of the full article, your ability to connect your quote to course materials, and the clarity / coherence of your essays. Your QRIs are worth 20% of your final grade.

Final Examination: Your final assignment is a take home examination consisting of three (short) essays. This exam will be discussed during the seminar. It will entail a review of all material – readings, discussions, lectures -- covered during the seminar. The Take Home Examination is worth 50% of your final grade. I will give the questions during the second last class meeting. Your Exam is due two weeks after our final session.

THE END